SUBJECT: In April 2024 the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) announced that it will issue new regulations to limit the amount of certain per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS) found in drinking water. Among other things, the agency will require that public water utilities test for six different types of PFAS chemicals. Operators will have three years to test for PFAS pollution, then an additional two years to identify, purchase, and install necessary technology to treat contaminated water.

According to EPA estimates, approximately 6-10% of public water utility systems may need to act to comply with the new standards. To assist in meeting these new standards, EPA has committed $1 billion – made available by the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law – to help implement PFAS testing and treatment at public water systems.

FISCAL IMPACT: UNKNOWN
